DOST Quezon Delivered New Drying Equipment to Boost SICAP's Cacao Production

The Department of Science and Technology (DOST) Quezon enhanced the drying efficiency of cacao production by providing 20 units of multi-purpose solar speed drying trays, known as PORTASOL, to the Samahan sa Industriya ng Cacao na Pangkabuhayan (SICAP) Quezon Agriculture Cooperative. The distribution took place in Tayabas City recently.

Each PORTASOL unit included 12 tiers of trays, a pyramid roof rack, a manual booklet, and a hood. This innovative technology features a ventilated design and a multi-level stacking system, which helps reduce mildew, rot, and pest infestations while optimizing storage capacity for dried crops. The equipment also allows farmers to dry cacao more efficiently, even during overcast weather.

SICAP Quezon Agricultural Cooperative, composed of farmer members from 38 municipalities and two cities in Quezon Province, envisions cacao production as a key driver for improving the livelihood of local farmers.

With this new equipment, the cooperative has continued to enhance its production capacity, already achieving over

1,700 kilograms of dried fermented cacao beans. (By Unice Faith N. Cataquiz)

NGCP not solely to blame for project delays, DOE admits

The Department of Energy (DOE) has admitted that NGCP is not solely responsible for delays in various transmission projects.

NGCP

Energy Undersecretary Sharon Garin explained that several factors have contributed to these delays, including pending approvals from the Energy Regulatory Commission (ERC) and issues related to rights of way involving landowners and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR).

"Sa right of way meron pa. There are cases that have pending ERC approval also. It's a culmination of everything, like sa Panay, there's an issue with the owner and the DENR," Undersecretary Sharon Garin said during the hearing of the Committee on Legislative Franchises.

Lawmakers welcomed Garin's pronouncement, with Philreca Party-List Rep. Presley De Jesus emphasizing that it is unfair to place all the blame on NGCP for the project delays.

"In short, hindi lang ito solely fault ng NGCP, just to make it clear. Ang masama rito, we're not trying to defend NGCP. We're trying to level the playing field. Kasi ang dating, kasalanan ng NGCP kung bakit maraming delays," De Jesus said.

"But straight from the horse's mouth, sabi mo may problema ERC at may pending pa sa korte," he added.

De Jesus also stressed the importance of pursuing these transmission projects in order to bring down electricity prices.

"Ano ba ang purpose natin, pababain ang presyo ng kuryente o we just blame one element of the energy family?" he asked.

NGCP, for its part, has committed to submit its explanation regarding the delayed transmission projects.

Defining nuisance candidates a big challenge for Comelec

The Commission on Elections (Comelec) is no stranger to vetting candidates, whether genuine or nuisance. However, with the recent Supreme Court (SC) ruling made public on Jan. 13, 2025, the Comelec faces a new, delicate challenge — defining what constitutes a nuisance candidate. This decision leaves open critical questions about the limits of the Comelec's power to disqualify candidates based on subjective or vague criteria, and whether such powers infringe on democratic freedoms.

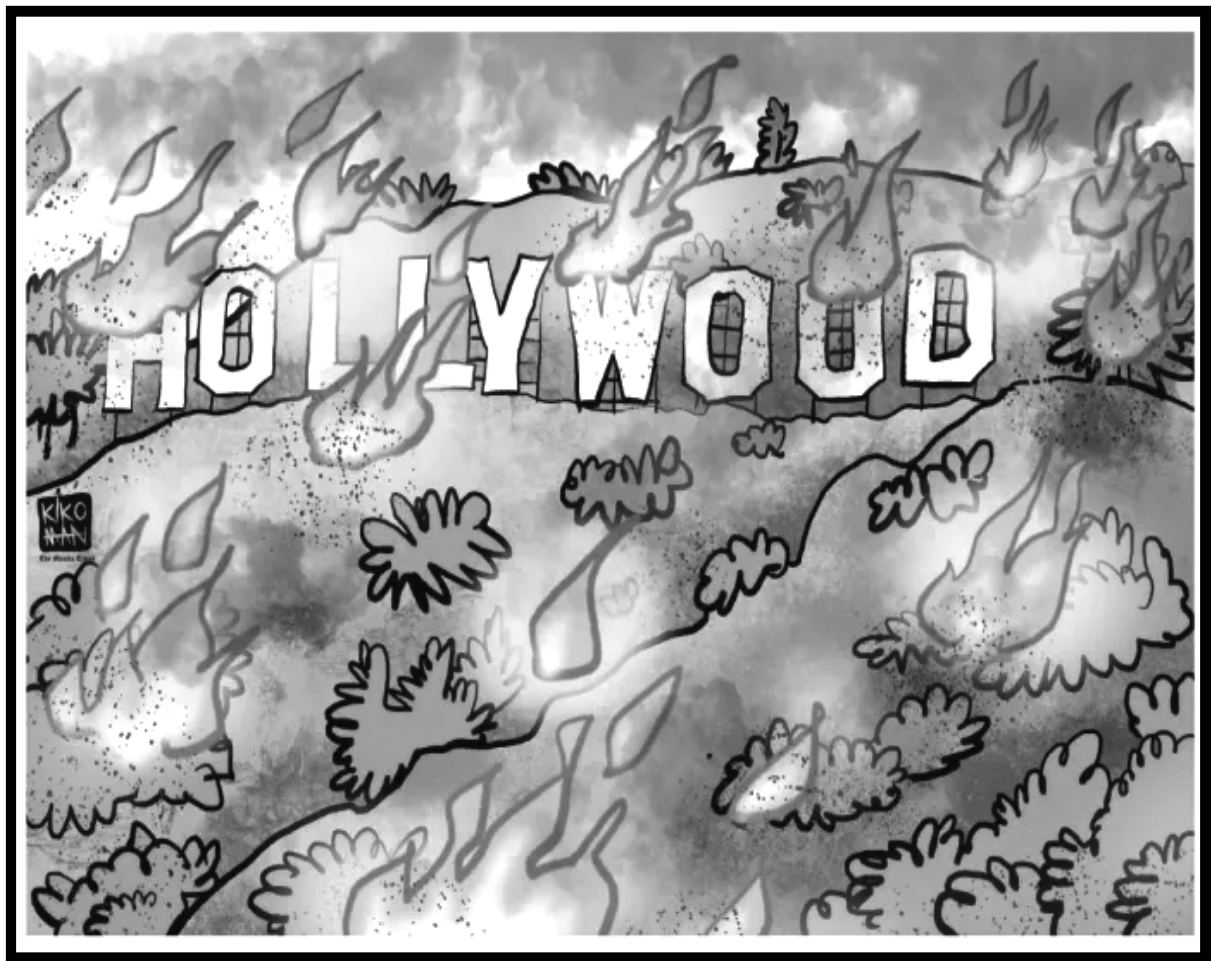

In its latest ruling, the SC emphasized that mere lack of funds, being largely unknown, or having a low chance of winning should not be grounds for declaring someone a nuisance candidate. The ruling's message is clear: elections should be open to all who meet the basic qualifications.

At the heart of this ruling is a firm defense of democratic inclusivity. The court's decision reflects a broader trend of protecting political participation from undue constraints. If every candidate without a high budget or significant following were automatically dismissed, we might risk excluding individuals who could offer fresh perspectives or represent marginalized communities.

But where does this leave the Comelec? It is tasked with balancing a fine line between encouraging robust participation in the political process and preventing the election system from being undermined by those whose candidacies are patently frivolous or designed solely to disrupt the process.

In the past, the Comelec had leaned on broad criteria to determine whether a candidate could be classified as a nuisance. Historically, "nuisance candidates" were those whose sole aim appeared to be creating disorder, drawing attention to themselves without any intention of seriously contesting an election. This often included candidates with no platform, minimal public presence, or those whose campaigns were driven by personal gain or a desire for media spectacle.

However, with the SC's latest ruling, the definition of a nuisance candidate becomes a big challenge. This development raises important questions: how does one truly differentiate between a "genuine" but minor candidate and one who is deliberately attempting to subvert the election process? The Comelec will now be forced to rely more heavily on the intent and nature of a candidate's actions, rather than their financial standing or popularity. This is subjective and prone to various interpretations.

The task placed on the Comelec is not only more complex but also comes with potential for misuse. If the Comelec is now required to probe deeper into a candidate's motivations and intentions, there could be greater room for ambiguity, making it harder to justify disqualifications without crossing into subjectivity.

Furthermore, by limiting the grounds for nuisance candidacy, the SC has also placed an additional responsibility on the Comelec in ensuring the election process remains orderly and meaningful. While the SC decision protects individual rights, it also requires the Comelec to be more discerning about how it allocates resources for the conduct of elections. Without the ability to exclude candidates based on financial limitations or perceived viability, the Comelec must now find other ways to streamline the process, ensuring that voters are not overwhelmed by a parade of unlikely and inconsequential contenders.

The court ruling underscores a larger concern about the integrity of elections. While it's vital to safeguard the right to run for office, it's equally important to prevent the electoral process from becoming a circus. This is where the Comelec's role becomes all the more crucial and challenging. Will it err on the side of caution, allowing any and all candidates to run, or will it take a more active role in ensuring that those who choose to participate are doing so for reasons that genuinely contribute to political discourse?

The Comelec has an unenviable task, let's closely watch how it will pan out.

10 Ways To Get Smart

According to one study, with each year added to our age, our thinking becomes slightly weaker. But, some people just get smarter with age. What is their secret to getting smarter?

1. Walk for 45 minutes. When we exercise, our body improves blood circulation, including blood flow to our brain. Dear students, when you don't know the answer to the test, move your feet and you might remember the correct answer.

2. Turn on the brain. Always use our thinking. Answer crosswords and puzzles. Enroll in school. Fight in chess. Don't retire and just continue with your projects.

3. Eat something to make you smart. The tested brain foods are peanuts, fatty fish (such as tuna tilapia, salmon, sardines, anchovies and tamban), avocado, olive oil, cocoa, spaghetti sauce and tomato sauce.

4. Omega 3 fish oil supplements can be taken. It has been proven to help improve blood flow to our hearts and brain.

5. Ask the doctor if you can Aspirin. If you have diabetes, heart disease, or stroke, aspirin 80 mg tablets per day may help you. Consulting with the doctor.

DOKTOR NG MASA

ni Dr. Willie Ong

6. Have a friend who is younger and older than you. Don't only talk to your age mates. You can learn a lot from your elders. And talking to children, you get caught in their energy.

7. Fight the stress. Stress is bad for the body and the brain. Stress is getting old especially when your problem is not immediately solved. Solve problems and take your actions lightly.

8. Keep dreaming. Believe that your dreams will come true. Go through it with diligence and prayer and you might get what you are expecting.

9. Take care of your head. Avoid falling or falling. Wear helmet and seatbelt to avoid accident. Don't let your head get punched or bumped. Our brain cells may die and shrink.

10. Consult with the doctor and have a yearly checkup. When your body is healthy, your mind is also energetic. Good luck.

VICTORIA, LAGUNA – The Department of Trade and Industry - Laguna Provincial Office (DTI-Laguna), through its designated Representative, supervised a grand raffle draw on January 11, 2025 in Santa Cruz, Laguna to ensure that a sales promotion activity was conducted in accordance with the approved mechanics and adhered to relevant laws, rules, and regulations including the Republic Act No. 7394 (RA 7394), otherwise known as the Consumer Act of the Philippines, and the DTI Department Administrative Order No. 2, Series of 1993. ## Faith in Action: A Christmas of Compassion and Giving

As the Christmas season enveloped us in its joyous preparations, a heart-warming reminder of the true essence of the holiday came from Ms. Donita Tapay, her company, D & F Foods Ms. Felinor Villar, Mr. Mohammad AISHahrani, Ms. Katrina Saludes, Denver Calalang. In a remarkable act of compassion, they dedicated their time and resources to feed 420 homeless individuals, spreading love, hope, and a sense of belonging.

Accompanying Ms. Donita was Mr. Ramon Matabang, a respected public servant who has served as the President of the Civil Registry Office in the Philippines for over three decades. Together, they brought not only sustenance but also hope for lasting change. Mr. Matabang's presence at the event was particularly significant as he collaborated with Ms. Donita on her initiative project, Oplan Birthright. This program aims to address the plight of unregistered and undocumented Filipinos who struggle to secure essential documents due to financial limitations, illiteracy, or lack of access to resources. Recognizing the barriers faced by these individuals, Ms. Donita and Mr. Matabang are determined to find sustainable solutions to make this project a reality in 2025. Speaking at the event, Ms. Donita emphasized, "Christmas is not just about giving gifts and spending time with our families. It's about FAITH IN ACTION • 5
